

Introducing the My Rights, My Say eLearning module

Helping teaching practitioners to reflect on the practice of listening to and involving young people with additional support needs.

The My Rights, My Say eLearning module is a short (20-25 minute), free and practical eLearning resource designed to help teaching practitioners and support staff, in secondary schools particularly, think about children's rights and pupils' involvement in decisions, in the context of additional support for learning.

The module has been developed and informed by learning from teachers, children's views officers, advocates and legal experts in child rights and ASL.

Hosted on the new Children in Scotland eLearning hub, you can access the module at this link: <https://childreninscotland.clcmoodle.org/> (you need to register and then you can access a range of FREE learning courses including the My Rights, My Say eLearning module)

Click here for our user guide to help you get started.

We developed the eLearning module in response to feedback from our partners and practitioners in schools. The module also reflects and supports the recommendations of Angela Morgan's ASL Review and the Scottish Government, COSLA and ADES Action Plan, published in October 2020, that responded to that review.

We hope that the My Rights My Say eLearning module will be a helpful tool in assisting you and the people you work with to reflect upon your practice of supporting children and young people with additional support needs to have their say.

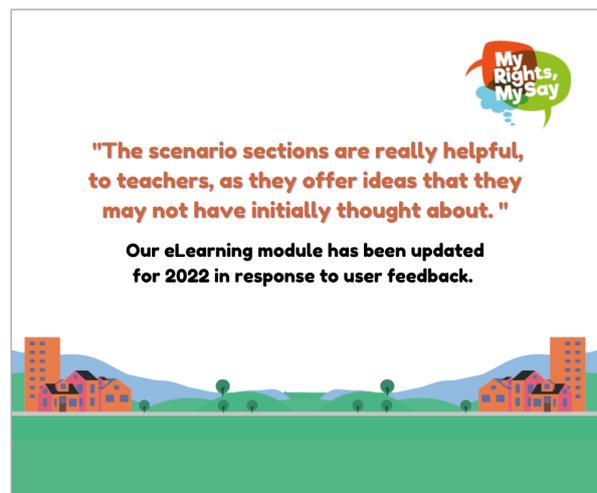

The My Rights, My Say eLearning module is supported by resources for teaching staff to start discussions in the classroom about child rights and additional support for learning.

These teaching resources have been developed by project staff (including teachers) in collaboration with children and young people.

You can access the resources at these links:

- Illustration Activity Pack: Exploring the Rights of Children with Additional Support Needs aged 12-15 Activity Pack
- Teachers' Resource: Notes (to accompany the slides below which gives pupils an opportunity to look at children's rights from a Scottish perspective, specifically learning about the extension of rights to 12-15 year olds with additional support needs)
- Teachers' Resource: Slides (powerpoint presentation for the classroom)

Please get in touch with us if you have any questions for our team on the eLearning module, the teaching resources or ways that My Rights, My Say can support you and your next steps in supporting children and young people with additional support needs in schools.

To contact My Rights, My Say email: childrensviews@childreninscotland.org.uk